A NOTE FROM MARIA

The timing of doing this play turned out to be PERFECT.

When I first encountered the remarkable theatre company FlawBored, I was very intrigued by their fresh, scrappy approach. If theatre is a mirror up to nature, their show It's A Motherfucking Pleasure is a satirical mirror that is both hilarious and ruthless, skewering liberals' righteous tendencies around "woke" culture. Little did I know that this idea of "woke-ness" would become one of the many inflection points for our country...and a target.

When I first got to Woolly almost seven years ago, I had the honor of being profiled in The Washingtonian. While the article was lovely, the headline was quite another: "Woolly Mammoth's New Leader Wants to Run the Most Woke Theater in Washington." CRINGE. Even when I started at Woolly in 2018, the idea of being "woke" was synonymous with a condescending and pretentious moral high ground, no matter how well-intentioned.

The term originated in Black culture and resistance movements signifying the idea of "waking up" to injustice and systemic oppression in this country. There is no perfected final state of "being woke," and there's no foreseeable finish line to ending oppression, at least not in my lifetime.

Fast forward to January 2025, and I could have never predicted that the backlash from our current administration's anti-DEI campaign would conflate that pretentious moral high ground with the words "diversity," "equity," and "inclusion."

Despite Disability being a protected class in the United States, people with disabilities are certainly not protected from folks willing to profit from it. Enter It's A Motherfucking Pleasure.

A critic at the Edinburgh Fringe called the show “a beautifully sinister Black Mirror episode.” I agree, and it is so much more. This is satire at its finest, with a dose of meta-theatricality thrown in.

I've strived in previous seasons to keep a conversation going with our audiences about Disability and its many forms with pieces like Teenage Dick by Mike Lew and Hi, Are You Single? by Ryan Haddad. That was not my attempt to be “woke.” I am programming bold, Woolly stories about the breadth of people who live in this country.

May we have the courage to keep talking about our distinct lived experiences, onstage and off. May It's A Motherfucking Pleasure deepen this discussion in a way that helps us navigate our ever-changing world. And may we keep waking up ... to each other.

ACCESS AS AESTHETIC: HOW IT'S A MOTHERFCKING PLEASURE CHANGES THE GAME

SAMUEL YATES, PH.D.

FlawBored's It's a Motherfcking Pleasure is more than a play; it is an intervention, a disruption, and, most importantly, an invitation. It calls upon us as an audience to engage with disability not as a spectacle or a narrative device, but as a creative force that reshapes performance itself. It is a production that, to borrow from disability scholars Mara Mills and Rebecca Sanchez, exemplifies "disability as method": a framework that insists on disability's role in restructuring how we think, perform, and interact with art.[1] Rather than forcing disabled artists to conform to existing theatrical norms, FlawBored bends theatre around the realities of the disabled experience, upending expectations in ways that are as discomfoting as they are exhilarating.

As a deaf dramaturg and scholar, much of my work focuses on dismantling disability simulations, the performance practice of nondisabled people playacting as disabled.[2] If you think about your own schooling, you've likely encountered a disability simulation. In years past, disability simulations were education tools wherein individuals used prosthetics like wheelchairs, blindfolds, or even cotton balls to presumably "understand" disabled embodiment. As a child, for example, my classmates were given noise-cancelling headphones and instructed to try to talk to each other so that they might better-empathize with how I engaged with the class. Disability simulations are well-meaning attempts at empathy, but the nondisabled performer does not experience disability in any meaningful way: they simply experience temporary ability loss, not disability gain. What might it mean to instead engage with disability as a positive, additive physical embodied experience or aesthetic in the world? In theatre, disability simulations are rich sites for understanding what we culturally think—or believe to be true—about what bodies are, based on what we script bodies to do onstage.

It's A Motherfcking Pleasure critiques disability simulations on and off the stage by centering disabled performers in their own narratives. For too long, able-bodied actors have “cripped up,” treating disability as a metaphor or a transformative challenge, reinforcing the ableist notion that disabled bodies must either be overcome or performed by those without lived experience.

FlawBored dismantles this trope with biting satire, exposing the hypocrisy of diversity efforts that tokenize disabled performers while failing to provide actual structural change. In doing so, the company refuses to reduce disability to mere representation—it demands that disability be understood as an essential and generative aspect of performance itself.

One of the production's most radical aspects is its seamless integration of accessibility features as part of its artistic vision. Many theatre companies treat accessibility as a logistical challenge rather than a creative opportunity. Closed captions, audio descriptions, and sign language interpretation are often added in separate, less visible ways, or in a scant number of “accessible” performances, reinforcing the idea that access is an optional feature rather than an essential part of theatre-making. It's a Motherfcking Pleasure directly challenges this paradigm by embedding accessibility into the show's dramaturgy. Integrated creative captions become dynamic visual elements and audio description is a primary mode of delivering information. Access is not just functional; it's poetic. This aligns with what Mia Mingus calls “access intimacy,” the idea that access should not be a cold, bureaucratic requirement but an ongoing relational practice that enhances artistic expression rather than limiting it.[3]

This production's rejection of traditional theatrical structures resonates with disabled artist JJJJerome Ellis's concept of dysfluency as resistance. In his work, he describes stuttering as a way to “open time,” breaking the expected flow of speech and forcing listeners into a different rhythm.[4] Likewise, It's a

Motherfcking Pleasure disrupts the linear and visual progress narratives that often accompany stories about disability. Instead of leading audiences toward an inspirational resolution, it refuses closure, leaving us suspended in uncertainty, implicated in the very biases the play critiques. In doing so, the production aligns with crip/queer scholar Alison Kafer's argument that disability should be framed politically rather than medically—rather than seeking a cure or resolution, it challenges the structures that render disability a problem in the first place.[5]

Theatre's accessibility—or lack thereof—is a pressing issue across the industry. From physical barriers in venues to the financial inaccessibility of adaptive technology, many traditional theatre spaces are often exclusionary by design. Designers often do not imagine disabled bodyminds to be the primary users of creative spaces, so rehearsal rooms, performance houses, and even theatrical sets are not built with access as a primary goal. FlawBored's approach to accessibility insists that change is not only possible but necessary. By refusing to separate access from art, they argue that a truly inclusive theatre must rethink everything from its architecture to its engagement practices, ensuring that disabled artists and audiences are not simply accommodated but valued as integral to the theatrical experience.

Woolly Mammoth Theatre's mission is to produce “courageous and invigorating new work to radically redefine theatre as a catalyst for an equitable, creative, and engaged society.”[6] It's a Motherfcking Pleasure works within this tradition, but it does more than redefine or catalyze—it implicates. It challenges audiences not just to witness but to interrogate their own assumptions. The work embodies the principles of crip authorship that Mills and Sanchez describe: it is not just about what is being said, but how it is being said, and who gets to say it. Form and content are inseparable here, and the refusal to conform to conventional theatrical aesthetics is as much a statement as the script itself.

Theatre, at its best, is transformative. It does not simply entertain—it shifts perspectives, unsettles norms, and makes the familiar strange. FlawBored's production does all of this and more. It is not just a play; it is a manifesto, a call to action, and a challenge to reimagine what theatre can be when disabled voices are not only included but are allowed to shape the medium itself. You, the audience, are not merely invited to watch; you are invited to engage, question, and co-create. The future of theatre, It's a Motherfcking Pleasure insists, belongs not to tradition but to transformation. The only question is: Are you ready to join in?

ABOUT WOOLLY MAMMOTH

The Tony Award®-winning Woolly Mammoth creates badass theatre that highlights the stunning, challenging, and tremendous complexity of our world. Woolly is proud to be considered “a national champion of the new—and frequently provocative—American play” (Washington Post).

For over 40 years, Woolly has maintained a high standard of artistic rigor while simultaneously daring to take risks, innovate, and push beyond perceived boundaries. Woolly Mammoth was co-founded in 1980 by Roger M. Brady, Linda Reinisch, and Howard Shalwitz and is now co-led by Artistic Director Maria Manuela Goyanes and Managing Director Kimberly E. Douglas. Located in Washington, DC, equidistant from the Capitol Building and the White House, this unique location influences Woolly’s investment in actively working our mission: To produce courageous and invigorating new work to radically redefine theatre as a catalyst for an equitable, creative, and engaged society.

One of the few remaining theatres in the country to maintain a company of artists, Woolly serves as an essential research and development role within the American theatre.

PLAYS PREMIERED HERE HAVE GONE ON TO PRODUCTIONS AT HUNDREDS OF THEATRES ALL OVER THE WORLD AND HAVE HAD LASTING IMPACTS ON THE FIELD.

A Strange Loop was produced at Woolly in 2021, ran on Broadway from April 2022 through January 2023, and won the Tony Award® for Best Musical in 2022. Other notable highlights include the world premiere productions of Danai Gurira’s Eclipsed in 2009 that later went on to be the first Broadway play with a cast & creative team of all Black women; Bruce Norris’ Pulitzer Prize-winner Clybourne Park in 2010; and Anne Washburn’s Mr. Burns: a post-electric play in 2012. Woolly produces theatre beyond our building by sending productions like Aaron Posner’s *Stupid F*cking Bird* across the nation, bringing Aleshea Harris’ What to Send Up When It Goes Down to neighborhoods throughout DC, and launching a national tour of Madeline Sayet's Where We Belong.

Woolly has built a reputation for innovation off the stage as well. Woolly values building relationships with its local community and resident artists in the DMV area. Our nationally-acclaimed Connectivity Department is one of the ways we accomplish this by linking Woolly to like-minded community organizations in order to generate mutually beneficial, impact and power-aware partnerships.

WE'VE EARNED OUR REPUTATION BY HOLDING FAST TO OUR CORE VALUES.

We are an anti-racist and radically inclusive community—across race, ethnicity, nationality, age, gender identity, sexual orientation, physical ability, socioeconomic background, and political viewpoint—in which all are encouraged to exchange ideas freely and reach for new understanding. We are a supportive home for creative risk-taking by our company and guest artists, staff, board, volunteers, audiences, donors, and colleagues. Through relentless inquiry and experimentation, we strive for world-class excellence and innovation in every aspect of our work.

OUR AUDIENCE COMPLETES OUR MISSION.

Woolly attracts one of the youngest and most diverse theatre audiences in DC, and we're committed to making our work widely accessible. Woolly was the first to pioneer Pay-What-You-Will tickets in the DMV, which are now available at every single performance. We also offer $25 day-of-show Stampede Seats, $25 tickets for all patrons 30 and Under, and a variety of discounts for educators, members of the military, and artists.

THANK YOU TO ALL OF OUR DONORS, SUBSCRIBERS, AND AUDIENCE MEMBERS. WITH YOUR SUPPORT, WE WILL CONTINUE TO FIND AND PRODUCE THE MOST INNOVATIVE NEW PLAYS IN AMERICA.

LAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Woolly Mammoth acknowledges that our theatre stands upon occupied, unceded territory: the ancestral homeland of the Nacotchtank whose descendants belong to the Piscataway peoples. Furthermore, the foundation of this city, and most of the original buildings in Washington, DC, were funded by the sale of enslaved people of African descent and built by their hands.

WHY GIVE?

Unlike the woolly mammoth, which went extinct more than 10,000 years ago, Woolly Mammoth Theatre Company isn't going anywhere anytime soon. The reason? People like you! Over our 40+ year history, contributions from patrons continue to provide the bedrock of support that makes everything we do possible.

YOUR GIFT TO WOOLLY MAMMOTH ALLOWS US TO:

Produce innovative theatrical productions you cannot see anywhere else.

Offer ticket accessibility programs such as Pay-What-You-Will seats for every performance, ensuring our work remains accessible to all.

Pilot radical care programs like our Company Pool Fund, which offers grants to our Company members to invest in their personal and professional growth.

Provide transformational career development opportunities through the Miranda Family Fellowship program to train and compensate the next generation of theatre makers.

Establish innovative collaborative partnerships with local organizations like SPIT DAT, DC's longest running open mic, THEARC Theater, and Howard University.

And so, so much more!
